I. Admissions Policy

A. Diploma Policy

A master's degree is awarded to students who fulfill the requirements for completion of the master's program. To fulfill these requirements, students must have been registered for at least the prescribed period, earned the prescribed number of credits, given an intermediate presentation, and passed their thesis defense and final examination. There is also a non-thesis track by which students can complete their degrees without writing a Master's thesis. Students who fulfill the specific requirements for each program or course receive, in addition, a certificate of completion.

Doctoral students are expected to translate the original results from the development of new concepts, pursuit of specialized research activities, and application of new methodologies into the integrated domain of media and governance by formulating, planning, and pursuing their own projects. To be awarded a doctoral degree, they must satisfy requirements regarding, among other things, the ability to use a foreign language, development of an original syllabus, earning of credits for skill-building courses, presentation of a doctoral dissertation research proposal, and teaching a course appropriate to their degree. Students pursuing a career professional track may be exempt from certain requirements provided that they have appropriate professional experience. Once a student has been awarded Ph.D. candidate status, a dissertation hearing and final examination by the Academic Degree Evaluation Committee are held to determine whether the presented dissertation merits award of a doctoral degree. If both the hearing and final examination are passed, a decision on whether to award a degree is then made by the Graduate School Committee.

B. Curriculum Policy

The principal objective of the master's program is to produce professionals with the expertise and practical skills to detect and resolve problems required to meet the needs of society. The everyday locus of research activity for the Master's student is their Project. Projects are research groups led by several faculty members, and represent subdivisions of the Programs covering the main research domains into specific themes of research. Through their involvement in these Project groups, students can pursue practical research and study, field work, and internships, as well as take lectures in the conventional classroom format.

The aim of the doctoral program is to train researchers, educators, and other specialists in advanced expertise, accurate reasoning skills, and ample originality. The curriculum is built around a core of research and dissertation supervision. Like the master's program, the everyday locus of research and learning activity is the Project. Following their own research plans, students receive advice and supervision on how to pursue their research and write their doctoral dissertation from an advisory group made up of faculty members in the Graduate School of Media and Governance and other researchers, and a research supervision group, which is formed once a student has become a Ph.D. candidate. In certain courses, the research supervision group always includes a foreign professor from an overseas institute.

C. Admissions Policy

The Graduate School of Media and Governance strives to identify and solve the problems faced by our modern society and design the future by engaging with a wide range of academic fields. To accomplish this, it does not limit itself to specific fields of study. The graduate school's mission is to advance the research at SFC by allowing the multiple fields of study to coexist and cooperate, whether it is science, social studies, humanities, or art. By using an interdisciplinary perspective and collaborative approach, the graduate school aims to develop true professionals who will explore new frontiers and identify and solve new complex issues. The student body is made up of not only those from domestic universities, but also international students and career professionals, making it a diverse home to intellectual discourse and collaboration. Without placing limitations on undergraduate fields of study or individual academic areas, we welcome students who wish to challenge themselves by identifying diverse problems in an increasing complex society and by employing original methods to find solutions through various projects. Admission to the Graduate School is possible in either April or September, and entrance examinations are held twice a year. The entrance examination consists of a first-round evaluation (document screening and essay test), and a second-round evaluation (interview), where applicants are comprehensively evaluated for their academic aptitudes, research motivations, research competencies, and other qualities. Those applying to doctoral programs and career professionals applying to master's programs are exempt from the essay test. Applications from overseas will be evaluated only by document screening.

II. Major Discipline and Admission Quota

Program	Major Discipline	Degree Conferred	Admission Quota*
Master's Program	Media and Governance	Master of Media and Governance	200

*The admission quota refers to the total number of students admitted in April and September from Japan and overseas each academic year.

*The number to be admitted through internal recommendation is about half of the admission quota.

III. Application Categories

The master's program has four categories for application, which are "Application through Internal Recommendation for Current Students of Keio University Faculty of Policy Management and Faculty of Environment and Information Studies," "General Entrance Examination: Application from within Japan," "General Entrance Examination: Application from Overseas," and "General Entrance Examination: Application for Career Professionals."

Information about the "General Entrance Examination: Application from within Japan," "General Entrance Examination: Application from Overseas," and "General Entrance Examination: Application for Career Professionals" is published separately.

IV. Program System

There are eight research fields called Programs. All graduate students are expected to belong to a Program and then pursue research consistent with the guidelines set by the Program they opt for. Upon successfully fulfilling the requirements, master's students will be awarded a Program Certificate in addition to a master's degree.

For further details on each program, refer to the following website:

V. Professional Courses

The graduate school (Master's/Doctoral Program) offers training courses in specialized areas called Professional Courses. The course curricula are designed to help master's students acquire expertise in specific career fields and become skilled professionals who can meet the challenges of a rapidly changing society. Students who successfully complete the master's program and meet the requirements set by a Professional Course, excluding the Global Environmental System Leaders Course, can acquire a Certificate of Course Completion in addition to a master's degree. VI. International Advanced Degrees Course

The International Advanced Degrees Course (IADC) offers master's degrees to students who apply and complete course work and all other requirements for the Course in the English language. English is the medium of instruction and also the language in which all assignments are to be submitted. English-speaking students will join Japanese-speaking students in the same master's program and Research Projects.

Other than the fact that students in the IADC take classes held in English, there is no distinction between English-speaking and Japanese-speaking students. Students completing the IADC will receive the same master's degree (Master of Media and Governance) as other students in the Graduate School of Media and Governance.

The Graduate School of Media and Governance covers a wide range of research specialties and currently offers eight main research groups called Programs. Each IADC applicant to the Graduate School of Media and Governance must choose one of the following four Programs before submitting his or her application:

Human Security and Communications (HC)

XX. Academic Fees and Types of Scholarships

A. Academic Fees

At present, academic fees for students enrolling in April or September 2019 have not been finalized. Applicants may refer to the table below for academic fees required for enrollment in 2018 for approximate figures.

1. Academic Fees Required for the Academic Year 2018

The following table shows the academic fees required for enrollment in 2018:

	Entering in April 2018	Entering in September 2018
	Master's	Master's

(in Japanese Yen)

- Please note that the Materials Distribution Fee and Other Course-related Fees, and the Student Health Care Mutual Aid Fee are collected by the University on behalf of other organizations and may be revised each academic year.

2. Academic Fees during Enrollment

Of the academic fees, the registration fee, tuition fee and facilities fee are decided every academic year according to a sliding scale in accordance with the University Rules. Any increase is based on rises in the wages of public servants notified in the National Personnel Authority Recommendation, and rises in the consumer price index. All students are required to pay the requisite amount of fees every year during their enrollment in Keio University.

3. Refunds

In principle, academic fees cannot be refunded. However, all fees will be refunded to those who have declined the offer of admission by the appropriate method and date. The deadline will be written in the Admission Registration Guide.

B. Types of Scholarships and Amount

There are various types of scholarships available to meritorious students with high scholastic ability, individual excellence, willingness to learn and keenness to conduct research, and/or who are in need of financial assistance. There are benefit-type scholarships that do not require repayment, and loan-type scholarships that require repayment after graduation.

Most scholarships call for applications in April and May. For details, check for announcements on the notice board located on the first floor of the A (Alpha) Building and the Keio University Scholarship Guidebook [奨学金案内(in Japanese only)] available at the Student Life Section.
